Darold Roy's 1965 Falcon Ranchero, Reno, Nevada

Darold Roy (FCA #15340) writes us that he is an avid reader of The National Falcon News. He finds reading the stories about FCA members and their many styles of Falcons very interesting. However, he says he hasn't noticed many articles about the Falcon Ranchero.

We've tried to remedy that as we feature this month his story of the restoration of a 1965 Falcon Ranchero. There are some pretty dramatic before and after photos included in the article. Don't miss it; it starts on page 16.

Cliff McKay
FCA President

"I encourage members to continue to help others who are interested in restoring or acquiring a Falcon for their very own."

Spring has sprung and summer is already upon us. Time seems to fly by like a Falcon and I'm just not sure I'm ready for that. Hope all of you have planned well and are ready to hit the roads for Sacramento, California, for our 38th National FCA Meet.

The summer months are the very best time of the year for our local chapter members to cruise around and be on the lookout for new Falcons and prospective new members. Invite folks to join in your local events. Our great Ford cars, trucks and vans are such draws; we just need to show them and they will come. Our friendly fellowship is hard to beat and is also a great recruiting tool. Don't forget to hand out your FCA business cards or pass along an older copy of our FCA magazine. Don't forget to take those kids to car shows too.

For those who are attending the National Meet in Sacramento, please plan on attending our Business Meeting on Saturday afternoon. This is where your votes are cast for President and Vice President (both one year terms), and a new Director (a five year term). Speaking of officer positions, we're always looking for interested members to volunteer. Other items that affect our club's operation may also be voted on at this time.

Approval has been granted for the 39th National Meet in July 2018 to be held in Wichita, Kansas. Their presentation will be shown during the 2017 Nationals. Looking ahead to 2019, a collaboration of chapters are looking at co-hosting the 40th National Meet in Arkansas, where the first National was held. Any chapters wishing to host a National Meet for 2020 and beyond need to be in attendance to promote their ideas and proposed plans.

I encourage members to continue to help others who are interested in restoring or acquiring a Falcon for their very own. Continue to spread the word on our great club and its many benefits.

Group travel caravans can be lots of fun and can help build a true sense of camaraderie between FCA members. I highly recommend member participation as it builds new friendships and renews old acquaintances, and ensures safety in numbers while traveling. Another benefit is that others are available to lend a helping hand if a problem should arise along the way.

July 12 is almost here, so be sure that you have your registration for the Meet made. The event hotel facilities are very close to sold out as I write this, so we are planning on a large turnout. Cancellations may open up rooms. Please take care traveling to and from Sacramento. Do not take chances on pushing yourselves or your Falcons beyond reasonable limits. Just a reminder, it will likely be very sunny, so bring along plenty of sunscreen, fluids, and whatever else you require to protect and comfort yourselves.

Remember each day is indeed a present. Take care and may God bless. Hope your summer is full of fun for your family. Enjoy flyin' those birds safely down America's highways and byways!

Is it a FALCON or Is it a FRONTENAC?

In 1960, Ford Canada introduced the Frontenac. Like Lincoln was to Ford, it was a separate division. Produced for the 1960 model year only, the Frontenac was essentially a 1960 Falcon with its own unique grille, taillights, and external trim. It was the second-best selling compact in Canada during its one year. The car may be the most Canadian-looking car of all time, thanks to the red maple leaf logos emblazoned on each hubcap, grille badge, and in the steering wheel center.

The Frontenac is one example of U.S. automakers' attempts to market slight variations of U.S. models as unique Canadian makes like Ford's Monarch and Meteor brands, and GM's Acadian. It was its own marque, and was marketed as such.

When the Falcon was introduced, Ford of Canada had a long-standing policy of building cars for Mercury dealers to match almost every model Ford dealers sold. To continue this practice, a compact car like the Falcon was needed. The Frontenac was the result. It was not a Falcon Frontenac or a Ford Frontenac, nor was it a Mercury or Meteor Frontenac. It was simply a Frontenac.

The car was named after a late 17th century governor of New France, Count Louis de Buade, Comte de Frontenac et de Palluau. Both Quebec and Ontario have Frontenac counties named after this colorful count. His name was also used for a car manufactured by Dominion Motors Ltd. of Toronto, Ontario. Dominion Motors, reorganized as the Canadian-controlled successor to Durant Motors of Canada, who built several hundred Frontenacs from August 1931 to early 1933.

Production figures included 2,801 units for its two-door model and 4,671 units of the four-door model. Only 725 two-door wagons were made with the four-door model's output almost doubling that at 1,438 units.

Frontenac prices started at $2,360 for the two-door sedan. Like the four-door sedan and two-door wagon, it was $14 more than the Falcon. The $2,740 four-door wagon was $13 more than Falcon.

Painted in "lustrous baked enamel," it was offered in nine single colors and 14 two-tone combinations. The Frontenac's interior was almost the same as that of a Falcon. Any Falcon identification was replaced by Frontenac logos. The two cars were built side by side in the Canadian assembly plant.

The Frontenac used the same engine as the Falcon—144 cubic inch, 90 hp six-cylinder motor. Three-speed synchromesh was standard but a two-speed automatic transmission was optional. Its wheelbase was 109.5 inches (2,781 mm), its length measured 181.2 inches (4,602 mm), and it was 70 inches (1,778 mm) wide.

Like the Falcon, the Frontenac was available in two- and four-door sedans. A few months after introduction, two- and four-door station wagons were added. Frontenac offered no sub-series or additional choice of models. DeLuxe trim was available, but was an option, not a model. This package was identifiable by the chrome trim around the side windows.

Visually, the greatest difference from the Falcon was its grille. Totally different from the Falcon, the Frontenac's grille was a bit more elaborate. Although the Falcon was devoid of all chrome on the sides except the fender script and DeLuxe window trim, the Frontenac had a bit more of the shiny stuff. In place of the Falcon script on the front fender there was a chrome wind split on the Frontenac. Near the front of this piece was a circular addition which was a small likeness of the center motif of the grille. Here, a red maple leaf was used instead of a gold one. On the rear fender were three, reverse teardrop-shaped chrome pieces, with a black rectangle in the thicker rear end. Frontenac hubcaps were similar to Falcon's in shape. Instead of "Ford" in block letters across the center, there was a good size red maple leaf in dead center.

The trunk-opening hardware consisted of a horizontal chrome piece, highlighted in the center by a black disc with script was situated below the trunk lid on the right side. The taillights were an interesting and innovative deviation from those of the Falcon. The lenses were considerably smaller than Falcon's and they appeared to be the same shape and size as the dome lights used in several Ford models around that time, but were made of red plastic. The rim was very wide in order to fit the Falcon design. This broad rim was fitted with several bevels to reflect the light from the smaller lens. The Frontenac's taillights appeared to be about as large as the Falcon's.

Compact cars were a popular commodity in 1960, particularly the Falcon. In Canada, a total of 17,152 Falcons were built during the 1960 model year. At the same time, 9,635 Frontenacs were produced. In that model year of Canadian compact automobile production, Frontenac was second to the Falcon. Its total was nearly 32 percent more than the third-place Corvair. There were nearly three Frontenacs built for every two Valiants or Studebaker Larks.

Quite possibly, the Frontenac's success contributed to its early demise. It proved to be a good selling car for Mercury dealers. In mid-year, Mercury began marketing its version of the Falcon in the United States, the Comet. It was not built or sold in Canada during the 1960 model year. It did go into production by Ford of Canada for 1961, however. That move made the Frontenac redundant, of course, so it was discontinued at the end of the 1960 model run.

In August 1960 a prototype 1961 Frontenac was driven from Halifax to Vancouver for a photo shoot only to learn that the Canadian model was discontinued from the domestic market and replaced by the Mercury Comet for the 1961 model year.

If you keep a keen eye out, you may just find one of these rare Frontenacs sitting on the show field at one of our Falcon regional or national events.

Launching The Red Rocket

Engine Build and Installation

In an earlier article, I wrote about the purchase of The Red Rocket from Billy Pope. We had agreed that he'd keep the original 170 CID engine and in turn, he would install a new engine for me. I bought a 200 CID engine from Doug Browning that had come out of his 1968 Falcon, thinking that it would be a simple bolt-in operation. After the new motor sat in the weather for a couple of years, it needed to be rebuilt. Billy graciously agreed to do the teardown, delivery and pickup to and from the machine shop, then to help assemble and install the new motor.

After many months and many other projects ahead of me, my turn finally came and the new motor was disassembled and taken to the machine shop. After the machining, Billy reassembled and blue-printed the motor for me.

Due to some unforeseen circumstances, we found ourselves almost dead in the water. The backing plate between the motor and the C4 transmission did not fit. In fact, the motor did not seem to fit the transmission at all.

After nearly an hour of head scratching and frantic telephone calls, we were made aware that starting in 1967, Ford machined two different sets of transmission mounting holes in six cylinder blocks because the manual transmission bell housing is larger than the C4 bell housing. We had been trying to line up my C4 bell housing with the manual transmission mounting holes. To Billy's credit, he had started to figure this out, but an explanation from Steve Springer and another Ford mechanic buddy of ours confirmed Billy's suspicions and gave us the confidence to move forward. There are two upper sets of transmission mounting holes; C4s use the lower set and manual transmissions use the upper set. With the multiple sets of mounting holes conundrum resolved, Billy Pope, Frank Bell and I moved forward with the installation of the motor.

After the motor was set down on the motor mounts and bolted to the transmission, we had another smaller "Oh No!" moment. Billy

The day finally arrived for installation, and Billy brought the motor out to my shop.

Note the two upper sets of transmission mounting holes. C4s use the lower set as shown; manual transmissions use the upper set.

noticed a broken rocker arm shaft mount. He knew he had a spare mount at home, but we were disappointed that there would be no firing of the motor that day.

I had left off many of the peripheral items from the block, such as fuel pump, alternator, starter, water pump, etc., to try and minimize interference from these items during installation. Now it was my turn to work on the engine. It's amazing how many pieces there are to go back on an engine, and how many of them need to be painted. After a couple of days working on the motor everything was starting to come together. My working "days" usually only lasted two to three hours.

With the rocker arm repaired, and all the external parts attached, we finally fired the motor. To break in the cam, we ran the engine at around 2000 RPMs for about one-half hour. But all was not right. The engine was backfiring and running rough. One cause was found to be a defective distributor cap. The rotor had almost worn out the contacts in the cap.

But, even after putting on a new cap, the engine was still rough. The engine timing just was not correct. After many head scratching moments, Billy theorized that the machine shop had not ground down the valve stems properly. Sure enough, a compression test showed number three and number four cylinders had almost no compression.

During assembly, I like to run a tap through all of the bolt holes, even on the rebuilt parts. It makes assembly a lot easier.

As the motor has hydraulic valves, no adjustment could be made with the existing valve train. None of us was looking forward to tearing the engine apart to get the valve stems reground. Luckily, Billy had an old rocker arm with adjustable valves. We swapped rocker arms which allowed us to adjust the valves.

With the valve properly adjusted, the engine fired right and still runs as smooth as silk. We were all overjoyed. It had taken two Saturdays and one Sunday afternoon, but the motor install was finally complete and the hood was put back on.

Now I alone am under the gun to get The Red Rocket back on the road. Still to be done are trips to the alignment shop and the upholstery shop for a new headliner and glass installation. After that, the exterior trim needs to be finished and then the interior.

The Build of My 1965 Falcon Ranchero

WHY

restore a Falcon Ranchero? Over the last few years I have helped a friend repair and restore his 1964 Falcon Sprint convertible; see related story in the February 2017 issue of The National Falcon News. While I am a Ford Mustang fan who restored a '67 Mustang to a restomod, I came to like the lines of the 1964 and 1965 Falcon while helping my friend work on his Sprint. I thought it would be neat to have a '64 or '65 Falcon Ranchero as a local runabout and parts chaser here in Reno. These two Ranchero model years carried the basic lines of the Falcon cars using the same uni-body chassis.

Restoring classic cars is not new to me. I have always had an affinity for cars and, since my retirement, working on them has become my passionate hobby. To date I have completed frame off restorations of two '57 Chevys and restored and restomodded my '67 Mustang convertible. I am fortunate to have the facilities to do this work which includes a four bay, two story garage with a lift and crane (engine hoist). I am an active member of the Reno Mustang Car Club, Mustang Club of America, and now, with the restoration of my Ranchero, I have recently joined the Falcon Club of America. With my car club affiliations and auto shop facilities there is no shortage of people who seek me out for help in working on their cars, which I am happy to do.

After a few months of searching, I found a '65 Ranchero not too far away in Sacramento.

Inspection of the truck found that the body and frame were in good shape. Not the same could be said for the interior and mechanicals. Nonetheless the little truck was sound and worthy of restoration. The Ranchero was summarily hauled over the Sierras to my garage in Reno. Because the truck was a California vehicle with little or no rust, there was no need for a frame off restoration. With that, I set about bringing the Ranchero back to life.

Major restoration work included:

- Engine removal and replacement with a Ford 5.0 power plant tied to a five-speed AOD transmission
- Fabrication of a shift lever housing for the automatic transmission
- To make room for the new engine, a new Optima battery was installed in the compartment in the bed behind the cab.
- Removal of the entire front suspension system and replaced with a TCI front end
- Custom flowmaster dual exhaust system
- Installation of Classic Auto Air for heat and air conditioning
- All new digital Auto Meter gauges
- Installation of a 900 watt stereo system with external speakers in the front valance
- New wiring harness
- Replacement of headlights and all interior lights with LEDs
- New tires mounted on new aluminum wheels
- New carpeting
- Re-upholstered seat and door panels
- Headliner replaced
- New paint inside and out which I did myself; the paint is a Mercedes color.
- Acquired and chromed the front grille and side trim pieces.

The results of all this work? See for yourself. My little Falcon Ranchero garners much attention at local car shows and, most recently, gathers crowds at the now world-famous Hot August Nights classic car celebration held here in Reno early each August.
